From Cantor to Cover Healing Truth in a Heavy Metal Hymn

When heavy metal band Disturbed released their hauntingly tender cover of The Sound of Silence, something remarkable happened—it didn’t just go viral, it resonated. Over 1 billion views later, the world had witnessed more than a hit; it had felt a moment.

This was a masterclass in healing through music.

Lead singer David Draiman — once expelled from three yeshivas — found his way back to vulnerability through the very tradition that shaped him: childhood cantor training. After vocal cord surgery and a long silence, he returned to the mic—raw, emotional, and open.

“I teared up because it had been so long since I allowed myself to go to that place vocally,” Draiman shared.

Paul Simon called Draiman’s performance “Powerful,” he affirmed what we already know: Music heals across all boundaries—genre, age, memory, and time.

It's that sacred emotional space — that we see music reach every day in senior care. A song has the ability to reach what is deeply hidden in all of us..

How Music Helped Marcus Find Home Again

When trauma fractures the world as we know it, music can stitch the pieces back together.

That's what happened to Marcus, a vibrant young man living with a traumatic brain injury. For him, music isn't background noise. It's a sanctuary. It's therapy. It's identity.

“Music helps me remember who I am.”

In his quiet room, surrounded by music and memories, Marcus finds calm when nothing else works. The pain softens. The chaos stills through every note, a sense of self is reclaimed.

This is the power of music. This is why we do what we do.

How Music is Revolutionizing Cardiac Care

At Hartford Hospital, a University of Connecticut study used Coro Health's MusicFirst to help reduce anxiety in acute coronary syndrome (ACS) patients. Over 3 months, patients in the cardiac ICU listened to personalized music selections - Rock and Classical were top picks.

- Significant anxiety reduction
- Vital signs trended downward
- No extra equipment needed - integrated with hospital TVs
- Potential cost savings: $8,500–$12,000 per patient annually

MusicFirst proved to be a simple, scalable, and effective non-pharmacological tool for patient well-being, supporting both clinical outcomes and staff workflows.
