This month on Coro Chronicles, I had the immense pleasure of sitting down with Amber Dahle, CDP, Vice President of Memory Care & Resident Engagement at Harmony Senior Services, for a deeply meaningful conversation about life, leadership, memory care, resilience, and the moments that shape our purpose.

Amber shares her journey with remarkable vulnerability and honesty, including the heartbreak of watching a carefully planned future suddenly change direction. Through that disruption, she found a deeper calling, one shaped by lived experience, hard lessons, and the stories she continues to carry with her.

How Familiar Music Helps Reduce Anxiety & Agitation in Dementia Care

When words are hard to find, music can still reach memory, emotion, and identity by helping turn moments of anxiety into moments of recognition and calm.

How Home Health Providers Can Support Dementia Care at Home

With patience, routine, and familiar music used with intention, home health providers can help people feel safer, known, and comforted right where they are.

Beethoven’s Final Language Was Written in Silence

Beethoven composed some of his most breathtaking music after the world had gone silent around him. In 1826, when he was about 55 years old, he wrote String Quartet No. 16 in F major, Op. 135 it was just months before he died in March 1827 at the age of 56.

By then, Beethoven was completely deaf. And yet, from that silence, he created something impossibly beautiful.

Performed with stunning, meditative restraint under the late maestro Seiji Ozawa, the piece becomes even more powerful. His expressions seem to carry the emotion Beethoven could no longer hear: the grief, the surrender, the tenderness, and the quiet beauty left behind.

It feels less like a performance and more like a soul speaking without needing to be heard. There is something deeply moving about an artist who lost sound, but never lost music.

Some songs remind us that beauty can still be born from silence.
